PAGE'S BATTERY.

THE MORRIS ARTILLERY COMPANY (also known successively as Coleman's, Page's and Montgomery's Battery) was organized in Hanover County, Virginia, during the summer of 1861, by Captain Lewis M. Coleman, A. M., Professor of Latin in the University of Virginia; Lieutenant Edward Morris, of Hanover County, Virginia, in whose honor the battery was named; and Lieutenant Hilary P. Jones, A.M., Principal of Hanover Academy, Virginia. Lieutenant Massie, of Hanover County, Virginia, was also one of the original commissioned officers.

Early in the following autumn Capt. Coleman moved the battery, consisting of four guns, up to the front, near Manassas Junction, Prince William County, Virginia. Private Richard Channing Moore Page, of the Rockbridge Battery, was transferred to the Morris Artillery Company, 15th October, 1861, and promoted to 2d Gun Sergeant. He had already seen considerable service in the Rockbridge Battery—having joined it at Winchester, Frederick County, Virginia, 14th July, 1861, and was with that company at the first battle of Bull Run, 21st July, 1861.

The Morris Artillery remained in camp near Manassas during the following winter, and was in the march to the Peninsula during the ensuing spring. It was reorganized about the middle of April, 1862, near Burnt Ordinary, during Johnston's retreat up the Peninsula. Lieut. Edward Morris had been honorably discharged for disability, caused by failing health. He died after the war. Lieut. Charles P. Higginson, promoted from Orderly Sergeant to fill the vacancy, resigned and went home, being over age. He, also, has died since the war. Capt. Coleman and Lieut. Jones were promoted Majors of Artillery. The former subsequently was promoted Lieutenant-Colonel of Artillery, and was mortally wounded at the first battle of Fredericksburg, 13th December, 1862. The latter became Colonel of Artillery, and, after serving through the war, resumed his occupation as Principal of Hanover Academy, Virginia, where he now lives. Lieut. Massie was assigned to duty on Major Jones' staff. He afterwards was Lieutenant in Fry's Battery. He was a gallant officer, and was wounded twice—once severely at Antietam (Sharpsburg), and dangerously at Spottsylvania. The writer of this sketch was standing near him on both occasions. Since the war he has removed to Kentucky.

In the reorganization referred to, R. C. M. Page was promoted Captain, with John L. Grubbs, Charles R. Montgomery, Henry W. Toler and Charles L. Coleman as Lieutenants.

After the battle of Antietam (Sharpsburg), which occurred in September, 1862, Lieuts. Grubbs and Toler were assigned to duty at Richmond, Virginia, where the former now resides; and Lieut. Samuel

H. Pendleton, formerly of Coke's Battery, was transferred to the Morris Artillery. Lieut. Toler subsequently returned to the battery, and was mortally wounded at the battle of Somerville Ford, on the Rapidan River, Orange County, Virginia, 14th September, 1863. Lieut. Pendleton remained with the battery until after the battle of Chancellorsville, May, 1863, when he was assigned to duty on the staff of Col. J. Thompson Brown, of the Artillery. After the battle of Gettysburg, July, 1863, he returned to the battery, and took command of it, in the absence of Captain Page, who was wounded. In this terrific fight the battery lost about 30 men and officers, killed and wounded, and 17 horses. Lieut. Montgomery had his sword and canteen both shot from his side. Lieut. Pendleton was in command at the battle of Somerville Ford, above mentioned. After the return of Capt. Page to the battery, in October, 1863, Lieut. Pendleton remained with the company until the following March, 1864, when he was assigned to duty on the staff of Brig.-Gen. A. L. Long, Chief of Artillery for the Second Corps. After the second great battle of Cold Harbor, June, 1864, he was assigned to duty in Richmond, and remained there until the war ended. He subsequently removed to New York City, and became a grain merchant.

During the latter part of October, 1862, while in camp at Apple Pie Ridge, Frederick County, Virginia, the battery received some additions to its members from the Long Island Artillery. This latter company had been organized by Capt. Clark, in Campbell County, Virginia, and had seen service under that brave officer in the battles around Richmond, Virginia, during the summer of 1862. Capt. Clark died, and, owing to severe marches and other causes, the battery, like several others at that time, became unfit for service, and was disbanded by order of General Lee. Some of the men were also assigned to duty in Fry's Battery. The Morris Artillery now became a six gun battery, and served as such in the first battle of Fredericksburg. During the following winter it was reduced, like all other batteries in Lee's army, to a homogeneous four-gun battery, and now consisted of four light twelve-pounders (Napoleon guns). Sergeant John H. Cochran was now promoted to Lieutenant.

In the Chancellorsville campaign this battery accompanied Jackson's corps in the famous march to Hooker's rear, and it was only a few yards in front of its guns that the immortal Stonewall Jackson was accidentally shot by his own infantry, on the night of May 1st, 1863. It had the honor of firing the signal gun at sunrise of Sunday morning, May 2d, 1863, for the commencement of the battle, as well as being the first battery to occupy the position known as Hazel Grove on that morning. It was the occupation of this grove by the Artillery that necessitated Hooker's defeat, as it was the key to his position.

Capt. Page being promoted to Major of Artillery in March, 1864, Lieut. Charles R. Montgomery, of Hanover County, Virginia, became Captain of the battery, and commanded it at Wilderness and Spottsylvania. In the latter battle, which occurred 12th May, 1864, three of the guns were taken, and many of the company were either killed or captured. Capt. Montgomery and a few men, with one gun, escaped, however, and served until the end of the war. He then returned home, and has since died. It appears that on the evening of the 11th May, 1864, the artillery in the salient of Lee's army had been withdrawn, by order of Gen. Lee himself, in order to be ready to move next morning to meet Gen. Grant at some other point. The Morris Artillery went into camp at the Harris House, near by, which was Gen. Ewell's headquarters; but it was ordered to move into camp not far from Spottsylvania Court House, about one mile and a half away. In the night, which was very dark, the return of Grant's army to its position that it had occupied during the day, became suspected at 9 P. M. Gen. Edward Johnson states that he reported it to Gen. Ewell about 11 P. M.* Gen. Long, Chief of Artillery, did not receive orders from Gen. Ewell to replace the artillery until 3.30 A. M., 12th May, and it was nearly 4 o'clock in the morning, amid the darkness and fog, that the Morris Artillery received orders to harness and hitch up, and move to the front. This was done, says Gen. Long in his report, "with great rapidity," and he was right. Never were men better skilled in harnessing and hitching up horses in the dark than the drivers of the Morris Artillery. But the order came too late. The guns were not even in position when the boys in blue, who had broken the line to the left, marched across the salient and literally took it in. It was only by accidental detention of one of the guns a short distance back that it was saved. Capt. Montgomery, with this one gun, however, performed excellent service during the rest of the day, and was honorably mentioned by Gen. Long in his report of the battle. The gallant Lieut. Charles Lloyd Coleman was mortally wounded, and his body was never recovered. Capt. Page, promoted Major of Artillery, was subsequently assigned to duty on the staff of Major-Gen. John C. Breckinridge, as Chief of Artillery for the Department of Southwest Virginia and East Tennessee, with headquarters at Wytheville, Wythe County, Virginia.* Gen. Breckinridge, becoming appointed Secretary of War

* Lieut. John H. Cochran was also transferred to this Department, and assigned to duty as Adjutant to the Chief of Artillery.

early in 1865, the Department was commanded by his successor, Brig.-Gen. John Echols. The Artillery of the Department, consisting of a fine battalion of 16 guns, was disbanded by order of Gen. Echols at Christiansburg, Montgomery County, Virginia, a few days after it was learned that Gen. Lee had surrendered. The following is a copy of the original order now in possession of Major Page:

“H'D QRS. DEPART. S. W. VA. & E. T. }
 “CHRISTIANSBURG, VA., 12th Apr., 1865. }

“The Artillery of this department having been this day disbanded, Major R. C. M. Page, Ch'f Art'y, and Lieut. J. H. Cochran, his Adj't, are hereby permitted to join any command they may select.

“By order.

“BRIG.-GEN. JOHN ECHOLS.

“J. STODDARD JOHNSTON, A. A. G.”

Maj. Page and Lieut. Cochran returned towards Northern Virginia, with the view of joining Mosby's or Rosser's commands; but hearing of Johnston's surrender. they both went home. After consulting with Hon. William C. Rives, former U. S. Senator from Virginia, Major Page went to Richmond early in May following and took the oath of allegiance in the capitol before General Patrick, of Ord's command. He subsequently removed to New York City, where he is now a practicing physician. Lieutenant Cochran took the oath at Fairfax C. H., Virginia. He also became a practicing physician, and now resides at The Plains, Fauquier County, Virginia.

Besides many picket duties and skirmishes, the Morris Artillery was actively engaged in some of the greatest battles of the war; such as Antietam (Sharpsburg), September, 1862; first Fredericksburg, 13th December, 1862; Chancellorsville, May, 1863; Gettysburg, July, 1863; Mine Run, December, 1863; Wilderness, May, 1864; and Spottsylvania, May 12th, 1864.

SERGEANT CORNELIUS S. STONE, of the second gun, enlisted in Hanover County, Virginia, August, 1861, when he was 23 years old. He was killed at the battle of Fredericksburg, 13th December, 1862, unmarried, and was buried near Ashland, Hanover County, Virginia.

He was transferred to Page's Battery (Morris Artillery), April, 1863. Promoted 2d Lieutenant soon after the battle of Chancellorsville, May, 1863, and transferred to Caskie's Battery, Dearing's Battalion, Pickett's Division, A. N. V. GUN-CORPORAL CHRISTOPHER JORDAN enlisted in Clark's Battery about March, 1862. He was probably from Halifax County, Virginia. He was killed, unmarried, at the battle of Fredericksburg, 13th December, 1862, and buried there. He was transferred from Clark's to Page's Battery (Morris Artillery) in October, 1862.

CAISSON-CORPORAL WILLIAM I. CRISHOLM enlisted at Richmond, Virginia, August 10th, 1861, aged 25 years. Severely wounded at the battle of Antietam (Sharpsburg), September 17th, 1862. He was wounded at the battle of Gettysburg, July 1st, 1863, and killed, unmarried, at the second battle of Cold Harbor, June, 1864. Buried at Burksville Junction, Prince Edward County, Virginia.

GUN-CORPORAL PHILIP A. HOWLE is reported as still living, but has not yet been heard from. He rendered valuable service in assisting Col. Mike Harman at the ferry over the Potomac, near Hagerstown, soon after the battle of Gettysburg. Corporal Howle, being over age, relinquished his active position, but still remained with the company.

The Morris Artillery was commanded by Capt. R. C. M. Page from the middle of April, 1862, to March, 1864, a period of about two years, during which time it saw most of its active service, and was known in the army as Page's Battery. The following roll of Page's Battery is probably complete, regarding the names of members, but the histories of some are as yet unknown.
